

Kurt Kendis

An international economist with 30 years experience in multinational financial services organizations, Kurt Kendis has worked as a strategist, analyst, and consultant for boards, senior managers, and executives worldwide. With a background in academia, he is currently Managing Director at The Banking Group. His subject matter expertise is global strategic management, multinational risk, executive and board development, and capacity building in emerging markets' banks. Mr. Kendis has developed a unique approach to problem-solving, where actual data is used to project alternative scenarios for senior managers' consideration.

For global multinational organizations -- all with an emphasis on emerging markets -- Mr. Kendis applies Dynamic Scenario Analysis to restructuring, planning, and risk management. His projects include individual coaching, on-site data gathering and analysis, and the synthesis of alternative choices into policy recommendations. Mr. Kendis is recognized world-wide for his ability to manage this process across multinational groups and in multiple languages and venues.

For global institutions and organizations who serve international banks, Mr. Kendis provides research, consulting and seminar services in the areas of Risk, Strategy and Planning, Governance, Operational Risk, and Innovation. Recently Mr. Kendis's engagements have been global. Work in Latin America, Africa, Asia and the subcontinent has expanded to Central Banks and accountancy firms as well as local and global banks.

Mr. Kendis has assumed a new role for his corporate customers in their Senior Management Development—that of aggregator. He combines research and modeling to assist senior executives' decision making. He has advised boards of directors and trustees of corporations, while continuing executive coaching in strategy and risk.
